

I strongly oppose the further deregulation of America's media. I recognize that there is a plethora of media outlets in our modern, internet world, but the fact remains that most Americans still receive most of their news and information from a very few sources. To think that the average working American (read - voter) will sit down and peruse obscure internet or independent media to get balanced coverage is pure folly. Failure to protect diversity of the media will further erode our democracy. Rather than allowing further consolidation of media in even fewer hands, I strongly support regulation AND the return of the fairness act. The airwaves are PUBLIC, and should be regulated for the benefit of the public - NOT for the benefit of a few megacorporations.
